On a balmy May night in Tallahassee, what began as a routine traffic stop for Calvin Riley, driving his white Mercedes Benz on South Monroe, quickly descended into a legal nightmare. Allegations of evidence planting by the Tallahassee Police Department have thrown a spotlight on the thin line between law enforcement and law-breaking.

The police stop, initiated by a white 26-year-old recruit of the department, would zigzag several potential legal avenues for police to arrest Riley; ultimately, after planting evidence of an empty liquor bottle in Riley's car, they would arrest him for driving under the influence and driving with a suspended license. Riley says He says the night 'nearly ruined his life.'

TPD Officer Plants Evidence in DUI Arrest

‘RILEY’

Calvin Riley Sr., 56, who goes by Riley, grew up in Tallahassee’s South City apartment complex. He spent years with his mother in the Meadow’s Mobile Home Park (<https://ourtallahassee.com/meadows-trailer-parks/>) in the late 80s.

In body-worn camera footage from the traffic stop, Riley wears his work clothes – a barber’s button-down with an electric razor on the back. His shirt says “RILEY” in large red embroidered letters.

Tallahassee Police Department Officer Kiersten Oliver approached behind his vehicle, turned on her lights, and pulled him over. At just 26 years old, Oliver is one of the new recruits to the Department under TPD’s Chief Lawrence Revell’s (<https://ourtallahassee.com/chief-lawrence-revell-should-resign-after-constant-distractions-for-tpd/>) aggressive (<https://ourtallahassee.com/tallahassee-police-department-recruitment-video-raises-concern-in-community/>) recruitment strategy.

After initially stopping Riley and getting his information, Oliver calls in backup and discusses the particulars with Officer Margaret Mueth who arrived at the scene. Oliver asks Mueth to contact Riley under the pretext of verifying his address to check if she thinks he is under the influence of something. “I feel like I’m getting some indications, I’m not really sure. I can’t really smell anything right now,” Oliver says to Mueth, indicating that her sense of smell was diminished.

Oliver, in comments captured by her body-worn camera, tells Riley that he smells like marijuana. Oliver, who says he doesn’t smoke weed, took offense to Oliver’s comments.

“You lie,” Riley says in the video.

Officers Craft A Plan

At various moments in the forty-four-minute-long body camera footage, Officer Oliver seems to go from charge to charge, looking for a way to arrest Oliver. In Florida, officers have discretion whether to ticket or arrest someone driving with a suspended license for the first offense. If an individual commits a second offense, it is mandatory for the officers to take them into custody and make an arrest. Riley received a suspended license notification just weeks before the stop on March 7th.

Officers Mueth and Oliver discussed the interaction in Oliver's car before approaching Riley again. Mueth testified that they formulated a plan: ask Riley to submit to a voluntary field sobriety test, and if he refused, they would exercise their voluntary discretion to arrest him for a first-time offense of driving with a suspended license.

When officers asked Riley to perform a voluntary roadside sobriety test, Riley refused.

They didn't tell him the consequences for refusing the then-optional test.

Despite Tallal claims that (Riley smelled like Tallahassee by the time) they had placed Riley in the back of Oliver's patrol car, officers began to claim that Riley smelled like alcohol.

"Is there enough, like before that?" Oliver asks Mueth after placing Riley in the backseat of her squad car.

"There's nothing we can do for the signal one portion of it? Because he refused?" Oliver asks Mueth, asking if they could charge him with a DUI. Mueth explains that the field sobriety test was voluntary at the time, so they couldn't charge him for refusing the optional field sobriety test.

The two searched Riley's car while he sat in the back of Oliver's squad car. They didn't find any marijuana.

'There's Vodka in his Seat'

"Oh, there's vodka in his seat... vodka was found," Officer Oliver notes to her body-worn camera. While they search Riley's car, Officer Mueth's body camera shows Oliver holding up the full bottle of cognac. Oliver also points to an insulated stainless steel tumbler-style cup in the center console, which Oliver

Drums “Sounded like a solo.”
Our Tallahassee. (<http://OurTallahassee.com>)

Body-worn camera footage doesn't show the officers smelling the cup, or removing it from the center console. Riley says the cup contained Arizona Green Tea, which he says is his drink of choice. Body-worn camera footage shows additional Arizona Green Tea bottles in his backseat.

📹 Officer Oliver can be seen tossing the now-empty liquor bottle onto the floorboard of Riley's passenger seat.

Oliver Tosses The Empty Liquor Bottle in the Floorboard of Passenger Seat After Pouring It Out

Officer Mueth then returned to Officer Oliver's car and returned to questioning Riley. As Riley sat detained in the back of Oliver's car, this time, Mueth returned to the subject of marijuana. From this moment, the body-worn camera shows Officer Oliver pouring out a liquid onto the street outside Riley's Mercedes. Oliver's body camera recorded the sound of the liquor bottle being opened. After Oliver pours out the bottle, she tosses it onto the floorboard of the passenger side of Riley's vehicle.

After Oliver poured the liquor out, she asked to move Riley from her patrol car to Mueth's. This change made it possible for Mueth, not Oliver, to be responsible for writing the arrest report. It also allowed Oliver to avoid signing the report. If she had, she'd be signing a document she knew to be false.

To move Riley to another patrol car, the TV to fill in backup. Sergeant Brian Smith of the Tallahassee Police Department arrives, a stocky white officer, senior in rank and age to Mueth and Oliver.

Police Turn off Body Cameras

After moving Riley without incident, the three officers huddled to discuss the case. “Did y’all search the car? Nothing in there?” Smith asks Mueth.

“No, well, ok, so, he had a bunch of alcohol stashed in there, but,” Mueth says.

“Nothing opened?” Smith asks.

“Yeah, open,” Mueth says. “In his, like, Turvis, in the center console, he had a mixed drink, and then under his knee, he had like, um, a little bottle of vodka tucked away.”

After his arrest, Oliver suggests moving Riley’s car to the New Life United Methodist Church parking lot, which they were outside of, to avoid Riley having to pay to get his car out of a tow lot. “I would just let it be towed, because he has done nothing for us to try to...” Mueth says, trailing off.

Riley told Our Tallahassee that between posting his $750 bond, legal fees, and missed work at the barbershop, he missed a car payment and then another, and he decided to forfeit his car back to the dealership.

“You still live?” Sergeant Smith asks, pointing at Officer Mueth’s body camera. He quickly looks away when he realizes she is. Just twenty seconds later, Mueth asked Oliver “Are you still on?”, Oliver shakes her head. The body camera footage ends.

The arrest report was written by Mueth, and signed by Mueth, Smith, and the booking officer. The report reads “a search of Riley’s vehicle uncovered a small bottle of vodka (approximately 5 fluid ounces) that was found open in a pocket on the driver’s seat cover.”

“I want to talk to my lawyer,” Riley says in the video.

TPD Officer Oliver in Deposition in Evidence Planting DUI Arrest

The Court Case

The public defender representing Riley questioned Officer Oliver in a pretrial hearing held in late February. Oliver claimed she poured the liquid out because of Tallahassee Police Department Policy #42 which she said “prohibited impounding liquids as evidence.”

It doesn't. A review of all Tallahassee Police Department policies found no policy prohibiting the collection of liquids as evidence.

Officer Oliver has been deposed twice in the case. In her second deposition, public defender's handed her a copy of TPD Policy #42. However, she was unable to locate any section that prohibited impounding liquids. Oliver stated “I don't remember” at least sixteen times during her second deposition.

Our Tallahassee. (<http://OurTallahassee.com>)

Judge acknowledges Riley was improperly Mirandized

The public defenders office debated in a series of pre-trial motions that testimony and body camera evidence of the liquor bottle not be admitted as evidence in the trial. The State Attorney's office objected.

"Officer Oliver had no ill intent behind this, had no reason to believe that it would exonerate the defendant," said Assistant State Attorney Emma Hershey.

"It's not just the dumping out of the alcohol. They destroyed the seal. The seal is important," said Public Defender Desiree Goodfellow. "They said that the policy is for open containers," Goodfellow said.

"But by destroying the seal, they made it inculpatory. They use the fact that that bottle was opened as evidence in the report. Officer Oliver said herself on the stand that, yes, an open alcohol bottle in the car is pretty big evidence for a DUI," Goodfellow said.

Our Tallahassee. (<http://OurTallahassee.com>) Judge Jason Jones, a former prosecutor, is overseeing the case. In a recent pretrial motion, Jones ruled to strike body camera evidence that included statements made by Riley before he was Mirandized. Riley was detained in Oliver's patrol car for over nine minutes before being informed of his Miranda rights while restrained in handcuffs. Jones didn't honor a motion by the public defender's office to strike evidence of the bottle of cognac.

"I heard what I thought was a seal being broken," Judge Jones said. "And one of the officers testified that she thinks that that's what she heard as well. That's going to be up for the jury to decide what they think."

Riley's jury trial begins on Friday, April 5th.

It seems like the liquid in the Tervis tumbler was way more important than what was in the sealed bottle. Did Riley provide a breath sample?

The fact that this was done by a recruit just goes to show you what they teach in the police academy. It's like a gang where the recruit has to engage in illegal conduct to make a false arrest to break the rules. So now they know the recruit will do the dirty for the rest of her career.
