If PVLA isn't supposed to have possession of the invoices, why are they allowed to have the laptop?

It's not that they aren't supposed to have possession of the invoices, it's that best practice would be for law enforcement to collect and retain the invoices. The same can be said for the laptop but to a lesser extent. It's not that it is forbidden, but not the best practice. But at the same time it's possible we can use that to create reasonable doubt.

Respectfully,

Ok. Thanks. There are emails with copies of invoices I could have found plus other files on the laptop. I'm just wondering if Sylvia would have deleted some stuff.
